John Barry writes the popular "Computer Illiteracy" column in InfoWorld, the trade magazine of the computer industry. In his column he pillories those hapless souls who have let the spirit of the machine dominate their use of human languages. As managing editor of InfoWorld Books, he has seen more material written about computers than most of us will see in a lifetime—if we are lucky. John owns enough crashed disks to cover three football fields (though why anyone would want to do this is beyond him).

Rich Tennant used to be a programmer until he saw the light and turned to art. The word "FORTRAN" makes him break out in a cold sweat. But anger is one of the great fuels of art, and his electronic experiences have left him with a gusher of malice that should last him the rest of his life.

- Has the army drafted your long-dead uncle for the third time this year?
- Does the phone company insist you owe them for 25 calls to Kuala Lumpur last month?
- Has your cat been called for jury duty?
- Does your once-healthy bank account now resemble the national debt?

COMPUTER HATERS OF THE WORLD UNITE! It's time to recognize and avenge the wonderful advances we've made thanks to computers—excessive eyestrain and headaches, irritating beeping noises, a one-ton printout where once there was a six-page report, a "simple" programming language you can't understand without five handbooks, a dictionary, and a math degree...it's enough to make your blood boil! But now it's our turn...enjoy page after page of tattered terminals, mauled monitors, chopped chips, kracked keyboards, and pulverized peripherals! No self-respecting computer hater should be without it!
